Tell Your Story

By Sarah Benjamin

I am terrible at jigsaw puzzles. I can watch my kids put together entire sections of a puzzle while I struggle to fit in one piece. But I love to see the finished product, the masterpiece, when it comes together (mostly without my help, of course).

The same has been true in life. I haven't been very good at putting the pieces together there either. I could get straight A's, but couldn't read a bus map. I could understand specifics, but not the big picture. I would take one passage of Scripture, interpret it to the nth degree of the law, then use it as a rope to bind myself with. When I was twelve, I read in the Old Testament that the Jews were not supposed to eat fat, or something like that. So when I ate my French dip sandwiches, I tried to pick out all the tiny bits of fat and then eat the rest of it. Here I was again, extracting a law and not understanding the whole picture.

Now some may see my twelve-year-old self as a wonderful Christian example of great devotion. But I wasn't. In reality, I was missing the joy and freedom of understanding God's true heart behind the law.

Why do I bring all of this up? I think that many Christians (though not at the extremes of my life) don't see the hidden places where we accept an emphasis of law in exchange for the bigger picture of God's heart for us. In other words, we are all used to reading about the burden and yoke of the Pharisees, but we don't recognize it when it pops up in our own lives. And this can be true in one specific area that I wanted to discuss today: The idea of telling our own stories and opening up about ourselves.

I think we need to awaken to the freedom of sharing. Let me explain more...

Most Christians are focused on verses of the Bible such as the following: "Let not the wise man boast in his wisdom...let not the rich man boast in his riches (Jeremiah 9:23). "But when you give to the needy, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing" (Matthew 6). We interpret these passages as saying we are not allowed to speak about ourselves at all. (After all, talking about ourselves would be bragging, right?) However, I think this misses the big picture of what the Bible is saying.

The Bible says to proclaim what God has done (Mark 5:20). It also says to love each other deeply (I Peter 4:8), which means a deep sharing of what is in in our hearts and lives (which also necessarily includes our accomplishments, which are an integral part of our lives' story).

There is a difference between bragging and sharing. Bragging has the intent to elevate yourself while putting others down, so others feel inferior to you. Bragging closes people out. But sharing, on the other hand, invites others in. It allows people to understand and know you better. The Bible says to "give honor" when honor is due (Romans 13:7). However, in order for us to give honor to one another, we have to actually know one another and know what is going on in each other's lives.

Sharing includes naming the struggles, of course, but it also includes naming the victories. Someone cannot really get to know you, unless they know the WHOLE you, which includes both the bad and the good—even things that might seem like bragging on the surface, but only because they are amazing areas where God has worked in your life.

In the end, our story is a gift that we can give to others. If we keep it within ourselves, then other people don't get to see God's glory in our story: the gifts that He has given us, the things that He has accomplished, his faithfulness through it all. And people don't really get to KNOW us. It is one of the deepest human needs to be known. But in our society, we often don't cross paths with people other than Sundays at church, if even that. In the old days you could read a community paper or bump into people at the grocery store or have barbecues for everyone in your neighborhood. But these times are gone. In our modern days, we feel stranded on an island in a sea of anonymity. Does anyone really know us? Does anyone really care? If we weren't there, would it make one ripple in the sea of humanity around us?

But God's word tells us we matter. He tells us that we are ONE with others in the connected community of the church, and He says that each person is valuable and deserving of special honor. And it is from that reality that we must operate, not according to the isolation we feel in our contemporary world. We can tell others the story of our lives, because it is a way to honor our individuality, a way to be known, a way to give glory to God.

In conclusion, when we put all the puzzle pieces together, God's heart for our lives is beautiful, not restrictive. So take your biblical permission and freedom—and your courage—and make a decision to share who you really are with your friends and family around you. It's okay. You are not bragging. You are leaving a legacy of God's faithfulness. So go ahead, tell your story.

You'll be glad you did.

Wayne has a praise for God who is so good.

On January 25th, on Woods Road his granddaughter Sydney and her children were hit head on by a 16-year-old who lost control and swerved into their lane. Her car is totaled, but God is so good. Everyone is ok. Other than Maddie (the baby), all were taken to the hospital and checked out. Wayne was able to take Maddie home to stay with Charlie while he was at the hospital with Sydney and Hayden while Duante (her husband) was at the other hospital with Cassidy.

The other driver Sydney thinks may have a concussion .

Wayne is so thankful that God is so good.

Please say prayers of thanks for all being ok and prayers for the young man who hit them.

God is good ALL THE TIME !
