Open and Honest Conversations

Hello friends and family! I am doing well and I am in very good spirits! The fields are always ripe for the harvest and have the privilege to work in them. The focus this month was on our small groups and the continued study of discipleship while strengthening the bonds of friendship amongst the group. I feel like our biggest impact while on the field will be here. To the right is a picture of us meeting on Thursday. We start off with a board game as we wait for everyone to arrive. Since we don't worry about having a time frame it allows us to be more relaxed and to enjoy each others company. When we have all have arrived, the time of worship starts. A few songs and scripture reading followed by prayer. For the lesson period my teammate Rachel and I share the lessons. Speaking into practical applications of discipleship, asking how and why we should. I plan on bringing in the beginning chapters of the book of Proverbs that speak on the call of wisdom and virtues gained. We also have one on one meetings throughout the week. Allowing us to pour into make personal connections with the students.

We planned two big events this month. A game night/bowling and a Halloween party. The intention for the game night was to have something easy to walk into, incase someone was uncertain about walking into a group of strangers. We played board games and different card games that different members brought. After awhile we went bowling (I am not good at bowling) I gave it my all.

The Halloween party was my personal favorite, I got to grill! I like to think that I can cook most things fairly well. Grilling has always been (and still is) my dad's specialty.

We used the church building in order to have plenty of space to spread out. About 15 college students arrived and we spent the night playing charades and talking around a fire. These may be students at the Tri-C and my job is to minister to them, but they are also my friends. I love this field and I love these people. I have learned many lessons while on the field, patience, humility, how to rely on God, how to lead by following, and how the power of fellowship can allow us to see God working in a hurting world. Always seek to serve and uplift your neighbors and you will see God exalted.

Thank you for your continued support and prayers! AIM is only possible with the support of the church. Love ya!
